In 1797 James Galloway, a Revolutionary War veteran and a member of General George Rogers Clark's 1782 expedition against the Shawnee village at Old Chillicothe, moved his family from Kentucky to the Ohio Country and settled in present-day Greene County, Ohio. Tecumseh, a respected and powerful Native American leader, and Galloway developed a lasting friendship. Tecumseh gave him a tomahawk pipe and they made a Pact of Peace and Friendship. Rebekah Galloway, the bright and well-read young daughter of James and Rebekah (Junkin) Galloway, read books from her father's library to Tecumseh. During his visits to their two-story log house, they had many discussions about these books and also events taking place on the frontier. When Rebekah was sixteen years of age and Tecumseh was 39-40 years old, he expressed his affection and asked for her hand in marriage. This book tells the story of her deliberation and the impact of her answer. Readers will also learn what happened when direct descendants of James Galloway and Tecumseh met in 1926 in Shawnee, Oklahoma, to renew that Pact of Peace and Friendship, made 129 years before. The book contains 32 color photographs.
