The Speech and Language Volume was developed to specifically address the unique speech, language and communication needs of students with autism spectrum disorder. The task analyzed presentation of teaching programs affords therapists the opportunity to teach skills in a systematic, concrete manner which clearly supports learning. As with all domains, it is essential that Learning Readiness skills be well established prior to expanding speech, language and communication skills. It is also crucial to ensure that all mastered teaching programs are fully generalized to the natural setting. When a student performs a skill spontaneously and in its natural context, one can be sure that the student owns the skill. Teaching programs in the Speech and Language Volume are divided into four domains and then ranked as primary, intermediate and secondary skills, with each skill level varying with regard to pre-requisite programs. The skill Assessment at the end of each domain is designed to assist in goal selection and serve as a progress tracking system.
