Dead Energy. Episode 1.: An Alex Cave Adventure. James M. Corkill

When the crew of the Scorpio left Valdez Alaska, her storage tanks were filled with 80,000 tons of heavy crude oil. This was a routine trip down to Washington State until the crew brought the Scorpio into the Puget Sound. One crewperson managed to radio for help, but it was too late. When the U.S. Coast Guard arrived to investigate, a lone man was standing at the railing, but he was not part of the crew. His name is Alex Cave, a vacationing geology instructor who had also responded to the distress call. When Alex explained to the Coast Guard Captain that the ship was deserted and the crude oil had mysteriously vanished without a trace, the Captain thought him mad until he learned that Alex is also ex-CIA and advisor to the Director of National Security. The next day the Coast Guard could not find an oil spill, and the corpses of the crew are discovered frozen on a mountain, one-hundred miles away. Soon panic grips the Pacific Northwest when the oil in the Alaska pipeline and west coast refineries vanishes without a trace. Transportation of basic necessities cannot reach the cities and common citizens turn to primal instincts to survive. The only clue Alex has to work with is a dollar size crystal found in the hold of the empty oil tanker. Can Alex solve the mystery before it's too late? Or will the United States succumb to . . . DEAD ENERGY.
