The Human Center Robert Baller

The Human Center essays draw upon history, sociology, psychology, anthropology, and economics in an attempt to describe how America became a nation of people who gave up their human identity in order to live side-by-side in a multicultural, materialistic society. This book is for those who would consider if we ever had a 'human center', a deep underlying set of instincts that served as our inner compass and which guided our worldview during the days of small scale tribes and helped make us happy. The author addresses issues such as self-similar, spirituality, trade, and near equality. The Human Center was written for those who ask if we could live smaller upon the earth.
