The search for a missing FBI agent and the mysterious disappearance of two little boys bring together two strangers in this electrifying thriller set in a rural western community. Benjy Poppatelle has run the Bureau of Indian Affairs in the sleepy town of Oogalah for years. When he takes time off for a vacation in Europe, he asks his long-time friend, Waco McClendon, to fill in for him.

From the start, Waco encounters difficulties. He's having a hard enough time keeping the office fully staffed, but when the sheriff comes to Waco for his help in searching the vicinity for a missing FBI agent, Waco wishes Benjy was on hand to give him advice-especially since the missing man may be linked to an unknown BIA employee.

Kayeela Winarrow desperately needs Benjy's advice also. She is a youth counselor and has been implicated in the alarming disappearance of two of her young patients. Determined to find the boys and clear her name, she has come to Oogalah for help.

When Kayeela finds Waco in Benjy's place, they soon realize that there may be a connection between their two seemingly unrelated problems. As they work together, the separate threads of their investigations will entangle them in a twisted web of conspiracy, crime and danger.
